

INFORMATION SHEET FOR PARENTS

Central themes of the BBT

Children love and need both parents. It is important for the development of children to be able to maintain relations with both parents. By the way, the child has a legal claim to contact with both parents. For these reasons, regular contact with both father and mother is important for the child. This is also true when the relationship between the parents is difficult or the meeting between the parent with visiting rights and the child requires a secure setting. The child is to be able to experience a relationship to both parents regardless of the conflicts which exist between the parents. Quarrels between the parents should not take place in the child's presence. The well-being of the child takes precedence over the interests of the parents. The BBT offers a temporary setting for the exercise of visiting rights until the parents, with the help of the specialist unit responsible, have developed a long-term solution.
